

Your primary responsibility is not to “do” for your individual, but to manage and empower them, to manage all aspects of their treatment, including discovering resources, arranging services and following up on implementation. There is only one of you, but you can put together an entire team and/or network of community support to meet the needs of your individual.